

Navigating key life moments with a legal plan

Legal matters occur throughout many stages of life—when you’re getting married, buying a home, or considering retirement. In fact, 62% of working adults say they have experienced a legal matter in the last three years.¹ Having access to a network of experienced attorneys through a legal plan empowers you to proactively handle matters in your life, helping to improve your emotional and financial well-being.

Access to a group legal plan can go a long way in bridging the representation gap for marginalized groups. This includes women, people of color, LGBTQ+ individuals, those with economic hardships, the elderly, and more.²
